1. Why do most traders actually fail, even when they have a strategy?

2. What is the real role of risk management in long-term profitability?

3. Why is chasing quick money incompatible with becoming a professional trader?

4. Do you believe psychology is more important than strategy? Why?

5. What happens if someone has a good strategy but bad psychology?

6. What happens if someone has good psychology but no strategy?

7. When did you personally realize psychology mattered?

8. What mistake cost you your first funded account?

9. What lesson did that experience teach you about yourself?

10. When you were losing, what emotions showed up the most?

11. What was your worst psychological habit when you started?

12. What single behavior caused you the most losses?

13. What mentally changed when you started becoming profitable?

14. What did you stop doing before you became profitable?

15. What did you start doing consistently?

16. Today, when you see a valid setup, what do you feel emotionally?

17. How do you personally deal with losses now?

18. What is the difference between a bad loss and a good loss?

19. How do you prevent revenge trading?

20. How do you handle winning streaks without becoming overconfident?

21. What do beginners think profitable trading looks like?

22. What does profitable trading actually look like in real life?

23. How does lifestyle (sleep, gym, stress, routine) affect trading psychology?

24. If you could give your younger trading self one piece of advice, what would it be?

25. What is the one thing you want students to understand before leaving this bootcamp?